Ellen -

Thanks. I'm stuck at a train station right now, so am looking at this on my phone. I may have more feedback later when I can review it more carefully, but an error in the first bullet jumped out at me immediately. It says that the mine is located generally on Forest Service lands. The mine, itself, would actually be almost entirely located on private land. It's the tailings that would be located on Forest Service land. That's the reason the Forest Supervisor gave me for his perception that the Forest Service has no control over the impacts of the mine (despite the fact that construction and operation of the mine is wholly dependent on Forest Service approval of the ROW that would allow the tailings to be dumped on Forest Service land).

I couldn't open the document you sent. Here is another version. Sam, when you get a chance, let's talk about some visuals...I think it would be good to have a map or google earth photo that shows the mine and the extent of potential impacts.

Rich and Kathy, here is a draft of the briefing paper for Rosemont. We've tried to front-load the document with our three top issues: what is the project, what are the impacts, and who are the stakeholders. The rest is important information, but I'm not sure how much time he'll have to read it or for us to go over it. Please let me know your comments by tomorrow afternoon; I'd like to get this to Mike and company by COB tomorrow.
